Introduction

This report is a summary of two research papers, prepared by the Institute for Community Partnership of Bethlehem University and the Center for Multiculturalism and Educational Research of Haifa University, on how Palestinian and Israeli non-governmental organizations (NGOs) are constituted within each society and how this affects their perception of and readiness for dialogue with the other side.

The outcome of the research carried out by the two universities stems from a questionnaire that each has drafted separately for its own public. From the questionnaires and the ensuing research papers it can be concluded that the two universities have in some way understood the question differently. Haifa University concentrates on mapping the mainstream NGOs to indicate their readiness for dialogue; whereas Bethlehem University first focuses on the historical context of dialogue in the Palestinian territories and its evolution, and then identifies the readiness of the different Palestinian NGOs to engage in dialogue.

The different approach of the two papers probably stems from a different understanding of dialogue and of its implications within the two societies. Dialogue in Palestinian society is a much more sensitive issue than in its Israeli counterpart, as dialogue is in some cases perceived as normalization and acceptance of the occupation. In Israel, people are much more flexible about the issue since they do not face the daily misfortune of living under occupation. This publication intentionally reflects this different approach to show the different stance of the two societies towards dialogue.

This publication, prepared by the Palestinian Center for the Dissemination of Democracy and Community Development (PANORAMA), within the framework of UNESCO's Civil Societies in Dialogue Programme, contains Bethlehem and Haifa Universities' research papers and questionnaires, and the lists of Israeli, Palestinian and joint mainstream peace and conflict resolution organizations that are willing to engage in dialogue.

Bethlehem University: Mapping of the Palestinian NGOs on the basis of their readiness to engage in dialogue

1. Historical-political context of the work of Palestinian NGOs

The functions and roles of the Palestinian NGOs have been influenced historically by the national and political factors that have affected the region for nearly a century. The stands of these organizations, which were the offspring of prevailing historical conditions, were influenced by successive developments in society, internal changes on one hand and external influences such as the mandate and the struggle against Zionism on the other, so much so that they became an important and basic part of the national Palestinian movement and assumed a pioneering role in resisting foreign colonization and defending the aspirations of the people (Al-Hoot, 1984).

During the period of the British Mandate, a variety of forms of non-governmental work emerged, ranging from increasingly active labour unions, such as the Arab Labourers Society, 1952, to students' and women's unions, sports clubs and charitable societies. Their work focused on the call for independence and Arab unity, besides resistance to the idea of establishing a national entity for the Jews in Palestine.

The 1948 Nakba (catastrophe) of the Palestinian people and the resultant dispersion and structural destruction of Palestinian society led to a recession and weakening of the work of NGOs and to a greater 'fragility' of the Palestinian organizations as the West Bank came under Jordanian domination and the Gaza Strip under Egyptian domination. The right of return, resistance to projects for settling the Palestinians in host countries and relief of refugees were at the centre of NGOs' work during the period up until June 1967, when the Israeli army occupied the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Among the direct results of that occupation was that the population of those regions lived under Israeli domination, thus creating a network of direct political and economic relations between the Israelis and Palestinians.

The end of the 1960s and beginning of the 1970s witnessed some political Palestinian-Israeli dialogue, which started initially as a dialogue between individuals or leftist, radical Israeli and Palestinian organizations. Both parties attempted to build a unified political strategy based on rejection of the Zionist nature of the State of Israel and the bourgeois nature of the official Arab regimes. Both also strove to effect a comprehensive political, economic and social change in the Arab world, including Israel, which would lead to the establishment of a democratic State in Palestine that would be part of a unified socialist Arab nation. Moreover, both parties believed that this was the best path towards resolving the Jewish and Palestinian questions.

On a parallel track, there emerged a dialogue of a different nature in the United States, at Harvard University, in 1969, its most prominent figures being Simon Shamir, Arthur Hertzberg and Edward Said. The objective of the dialogue was to move away from the dividing lines of animosity between the two parties towards a level of understanding and reciprocal recognition. The Harvard dialogue led to political and academic meetings between Israelis and Palestinians in the United States and the West in general.

In terms of non-governmental work, the Palestinian factions started directing their interest to activities inside the West Bank and Gaza Strip. They established people's committees and groups, through which they could engage in political activities on the one hand and provide development services for the Palestinian population on the other. Within that framework, committees for agriculture, health, women, unions, students, peasants and youth were established, and these were considered political arms for the main factions in the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), which offered different development alternatives (Abdul-Hadi, 1997).

After 1973, the Israeli occupation forces reduced their wide military deployment inside the Palestinian cities and reorganized their control through the civil administration departments which were headed by military generals and which administered the Palestinian territories and ran the Palestinian people's daily affairs in such a way as to meet the security and economic needs of the occupation.

This created a state of daily interaction and communication, under the pressure of the everyday needs of the inhabitants, between the Israeli civil administration and the Palestinian population. By setting up the Israeli civil administration institutions and concealing the role of the Israeli army, the aim was to create 'normal conditions' between the Israeli occupation and the Palestinian people and to secure acceptance by the latter of the status quo and their immersion in normal life without having recourse to resistance.

After the eruption of the first Intifada (uprising) in 1987, non-governmental organizations played an effective role, especially by virtue of the popular nature of the Intifada during its first years. The Intifada slogan was the ending of occupation and establishment of an independent State. The work of the Palestinian NGOs took a different turn after the Oslo Accords and the establishment of the Palestinian National Authority (PNA).

2. Theoretical and political context for the concept of dialogue

The concept of dialogue overlaps with other parallel concepts, most important among which is the concept of normalization. This has caused great concern among different sectors of the Palestinian people, and increasingly so as the Palestinians have become aware that dialogue invariably results in the normalization of some aspects of the Israeli occupation.

That being said, the meaning of the concept of dialogue is different from that of normalization. The concept of normalization includes the establishment of normal political, economic and cultural relations between two parties or States that have put behind them a phase of animosity and estrangement. For example, Dr Mohammad Abed Al-Jabiri says that normalization is the return of affairs to a state of normalcy, while the researcher Tareq Anwar believes that normalization is a transformation from an abnormal state of conflict and confrontation to a normal state of cooperation and good neighbourly relations (Anwar, 1994). The concept of dialogue is different in essence and includes entering into an exchange of views and stands on the conflictual or disputed issues for the purpose of bridging the divide between the divergent stances and finding certain points of agreement that will expand or shrink according to a number of internal and external conditions leading the two parties to dialogue or conflict. The Palestinian intellectual Edward Said, a well-known enthusiastic supporter of the principle of dialogue between cultures and coexistence of peoples, set conditions for dialogue when he said, 'The principle of right and real justice should be applied before real dialogue can start. Such a dialogue cannot exist except between two equal parties, one of which is subordinate and the other domineering' (Said, 2002).

3. Differing stands on dialogue in the light of the Oslo Accords

After the signing of the Oslo Accords between the PLO and Israel, international and regional organizations embarked actively and energetically on the funding of joint projects. Several civil society organizations and the Palestinian NGOs participated in these projects. An example was Agricultural Relief, which was among the organizations that accepted joint projects and expressed its opinion about dialogue with the Israeli organizations at a workshop held in Ramallah in 1999, where it stated its belief in the importance of addressing Israeli public opinion and attempting to have a positive effect on it in order to achieve more recognition and support for the Palestinian national programme as embodied in the Declaration of Independence. Agricultural Relief also believes in the significance of its professional basis for delineating its relations with Israeli institutions in the agricultural sector in the light of its awareness of the level of advancement of the Israeli technology and know-how in the agricultural field, as well as the importance of making use of this, provided that any group with which it cooperates believes in the right of the Palestinian people to independence and the establishment of their State. It also considers that the needs of the institution are the prime drive behind any cooperative activity (Agricultural Relief, 1999).

A rather different view of the concept of dialogue is to be found, however, among some organizations and personalities in Palestinian society. For instance, Al-Mutawakkel Taha, a former Director of the Union of Palestinian Writers in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, wonders how it is possible to establish a normal relationship between the victim and the hangman. He rejects the establishment of this relationship even through writing or any other activity (Interview with Al-Mutawakkel, 1999). For his part, Ranad Qabajah, who is in charge of programmes in the Network of NGOs, has criticized these projects for having an external rather than a Palestinian perspective, and being designed to establish relations without a clear political vision. They are not related to the aim of solving the conflict and are only intended to create the impression that things are running normally (Interview with Ranad Qabajah, 2005).

The Palestinian movement that calls for the academic and cultural boycott of Israel believes that the existence of joint Palestinian-Israeli projects and activities in scientific research or cultural dialogue, and the establishment of normal scientific or professional relations with Israelis that do not aim at resisting oppression, create the deceptive impression that peace is imminent or that cooperation paves the way for the necessary understanding between the two peoples in order to reach agreement on their differences. It maintains that those who support such projects or relations are not aware that scientific and cultural cooperation with the Israelis comes only after the achievement of justice and equality and consequently historical reconciliation rather than before or in preparation for them; and that they also ignore the fact that the main problem between the Palestinians and the Israelis is not due to a cultural gap that separates one side from the other or a psychological complex that requires the elimination of the stereotypes that each side holds about the other, but is a political problem that can be solved through political means by political powers rather than through creating understanding among individuals that have good intentions to understand each other. In conclusion, the organization holds that the real outcome of scientific, professional, artistic and 'dialogue' projects is the weakening of the elements of Palestinian strength and resistance through which justice and liberation can be achieved (Popular Work Newsletter, 2005).

4. The stand of the Palestinian NGOs on dialogue with the Israeli organizations and its most salient manifestations

The findings of the research show that the Palestinian NGOs displayed a medium degree of readiness for dialogue with the Israeli organizations.

The Palestinian NGOs think that it is necessary to exercise caution when it comes to the issue of dialogue with the Israeli organizations; urging such caution is prompted by the fears and doubts expressed by the Palestinians about the possibility of dialogue being turned into a tool to condone and legitimize occupation. Second to this response was the belief that the future of dialogue with the Israeli side is dependent on the readiness of Israel to give the Palestinians their rights.

Dialogue is still considered by the Palestinian NGOs the best way to exchange viewpoints. That notwithstanding, there is a widespread conviction among the Palestinians that dialogue in the final analysis serves the Israeli interests more than it does the Palestinian interests: 71% of the sample stated that dialogue is an Israeli need while 30.6% said it is a Palestinian need. This result can only be explained by the fear of limiting dialogue to obtaining funding and economic projects rather than seeing it as a way of putting an end to occupation.

5. Understanding of the concepts of dialogue and normalization by Palestinian NGOs

Most of the NGOs believe that there exists confusion between dialogue and normalization; the concept of dialogue is vague and unclear in the minds of the majority of the Palestinian NGOs.

Definition of dialogue in the Gaza Strip

Two definitions for dialogue in the Gaza Strip can be referred to. The first position accepts dialogue as a communication tool and means used to achieve objectives common to two parties, based on parity. The words ‘parity’ and ‘exchange of viewpoints’ were actually used by the proponents of this position.

The second position rejects dialogue and thinks that it leads to normalization and that both dialogue and normalization are two sides of the same coin. Some responses indicated that normalization is ‘submission/subject to and integration into the occupying country.’

Definition of dialogue in the West Bank

Responses in the West Bank were not different from those in Gaza. The above two positions appeared in the West Bank data but with a clearer distinction drawn between dialogue and normalization. Besides defining dialogue as a means of exchanging knowledge and of communication, there was emphasis on the idea that dialogue entails explanation of one’s stand to the other side. Dialogue was defined as ‘communication between organizations based on parity, provided that the organizations reject occupation’.

On the other hand, respondents viewed normalization as a means to impose the Israeli perspective on the Palestinian reality. The responses in the sample showed that the organizations defined the concept of normalization as ‘acceptance of the master and slave game’ and ‘the implementation of the Israeli conditions as if conflict were non-existent.’

6. Positive and negative aspects of the process of dialogue between Palestinian and Israeli organizations

Responses concerning the positive aspects of dialogue in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank were the same – mainly exerting influence on the other side regarding recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people, exposing the ugly face of occupation, benefiting from professional experience, and others.

With regard to the negative aspects of dialogue, the responses in Gaza and the West Bank were similar. The sample indicated that the main negative aspects of dialogue were seen to be the misuse of dialogue by the Israelis as the stronger side, and the Palestinian public's negative view of dialogue, which is attributed mainly to the absence of conviction on the part of Palestinian public opinion regarding the good intentions of the Israelis and the absence of positive and tangible practical results of dialogue.

7. Barriers that obstruct the way to dialogue between Palestinian and Israeli NGOs

The research findings show no substantial differences in responses between the Gaza Strip and the West Bank. However, the organizations in the West Bank expressed an interest in those aspects that were important and urgent for them, an example being the confiscation of land and construction of settlements, which are a matter of urgency in the West Bank. Besides, those organizations pointed out that it is necessary for civil society organizations to have a conceptual vision regarding the issue of dialogue. This was not mentioned in the responses of the organizations in the Gaza Strip. On the other hand, the organizations in the Gaza Strip referred to the role of religion as a barrier, which may be due to the somewhat conservative nature of the cultural and social environment in the Gaza Strip compared with that in the West Bank. It may also be due to the siege environment as such and the strict measures of closure prevailing in the Gaza Strip, which in turn hinders the process of cultural interaction with all the Palestinian cities.

8. Appropriate authorities that can start dialogue with Israeli organizations

The data indicated that the majority of the sample respondents agreed about the role played in the dialogue process by politicians and the PNA as appropriate authorities. On the other hand, a clear difference is noted between the Gaza and West Bank organizations regarding the role that some authorities must play in the dialogue process. The West Bank organizations focus on organizations that reject the Israeli occupation, while the Gaza organizations see some of the religious bodies as appropriate authorities for dialogue and think that it is possible for such bodies to facilitate dialogue since they are an authority that is respected in society.

9. Conditions and criteria stipulated by Palestinian NGOs to start the process of dialogue with Israeli organizations

All respondents in the sample from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip agreed on clear criteria such as ending occupation, recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people and presence of a neutral third party in the process of dialogue. On the other hand, respondents in the West Bank sample differed from those in Gaza by emphasizing the following: calling for an end to settlement construction since it is widespread and condensed in the West Bank, being from the peace camp, and existence of a clear policy for dialogue.

10. Stand on dialogue and its relation to independent variables

The review made in this publication showed that the organizations working in the field of journalism and the media expressed their readiness to engage in dialogue (65.6%), followed by organizations of opinion studies and polls (64.2%), and community health organizations (61.6%). It can be concluded that organizations working in journalism, research and health are those that are most ready for dialogue because of the nature of their work, coordination being required for the daily updating and enrichment of news and information, and for the development of the health sector, including medication. This also applies to cases dealt with by human rights organizations and labour unions.

However, the organizations that deal with education, community development, culture, charity, architecture and heritage were less ready for dialogue since the situations and cases they deal with are bound up with the essence of Palestinian national interests and cultural identity, creating obstacles to dialogue. This was reflected in the qualitative responses of some organizations, a typical answer being: 'The political and cultural difference between the two sides hinders dialogue.'

Location of organizations

The differences observed were between the organizations located in the cities and those in the camps, the former being more strongly disposed towards dialogue with the Israeli organizations than the latter. Differences were also noted between the village and the camp organizations, the former being more strongly oriented towards dialogue than the latter.

The camp organizations stated that one of the most significant conditions for dialogue with the Israeli organizations was recognition of the right of return, a typical response being 'recognition of the refugees' right of return and the establishment of the independent State'.

With regard to the definition of dialogue, some camp organizations viewed it as ‘communication among the organizations on an equal footing, provided that they reject occupation’. This seems logical since the refugee problem is pivotal in the Arab-Israeli conflict. The refugees have been waiting for the right of return for 57 years, despite the passing of United Nations resolutions and recommendations, most prominent among which are resolution 194, which guarantees for refugees the right of return and reparations, and resolution 242, which calls for land for peace and an equitable and comprehensive settlement of the refugee problem. On the other hand, the extremely harsh camp conditions, population density and poor living, educational and social standards lower the degree of readiness for dialogue.

Organizations’ type of membership

The NGOs’ readiness for dialogue with Israeli organizations across all membership types was of a medium degree. The means and percentages were low among those with a local membership, while those for organizations with non-local membership (international and Israeli) were medium, but high compared with local organizations. This is due to the fact that the nature of the Palestinian local agenda is different from that of other organizations and to the fact that there exist no political or cultural obstacles that prevent international organizations from engaging in dialogue.

Participation in previous joint projects with Israeli organizations

Differences in readiness for dialogue were observed between organizations that participated or had participated in joint projects with Israeli organizations and those that had not. The formers’ degree of readiness for dialogue was higher, on account of their joint work and mutual relations. In order to understand the concept of dialogue as viewed by the NGOs that had previously participated in prior joint projects with Israeli organizations, the responses to the qualitative questions were analysed. Those organizations regarded dialogue as ‘one of the means of resistance’, in order not to place themselves in opposition to predominant public opinion in Palestinian society.

Year of establishment

Pair-wise comparisons of differences in the degree of the Palestinian NGOs’ readiness for dialogue with their Israeli counterparts according to the year of establishment show that the differences were between those organizations that were established during the period 1987-1993 and those that were established in 2000 and later, the latter organizations being more strongly disposed towards dialogue. To explain this difference, the research team thinks that the political, social and economic conditions under which the organizations were established between 1987 and 1993, which was the first Intifada period, were drastically different from those of the second Intifada period. During the first Intifada, community associations were established under conditions that were unfavourable to dialogue or to the building of any relations with Israelis, regardless of whether they were organizations or individuals. In contrast, when it came to the organizations that were established after 2000, the presence of the PNA and the authorization to engage in dialogue gave those organizations the impetus for dialogue with the Israeli organizations, in addition to those nascent organizations' needs for financial resources essential for their sustainability.

The research also shows that the movement for dialogue with the Israeli organizations has been gaining momentum - except during the Intifada period, for the reasons given. This growing movement or orientation finds further evidence in the organizations' view that dialogue strengthens the sides that support the rights of the Palestinian people and that fear of dialogue is exaggerated. This is in line with the conditions specified in the sample, linking dialogue to the realization of the human rights of the Palestinian people.

Respondent's educational background

The research shows that the higher the respondents' educational qualifications, the greater the degree of readiness for dialogue. It may be deduced that higher educational qualifications widen the respondents' understanding and choices and hence increase their need for dialogue. The fact that this group with a more substantial educational background regards dialogue as one of the essential means for solving the conflict may accordingly be attributed to the cultural changes brought about by higher educational qualifications.

11. Conclusion

The present study aimed at identifying the extent of the Palestinian NGOs' readiness for dialogue with the Israeli organizations and the relation between this degree of readiness and a number of political, social and economic variables. The study addressed this topic as a multidimensional phenomenon. To this end, the research team developed a questionnaire that consisted of three sections. The first section included a 38-item measure of the extent of the Palestinian NGOs' readiness for dialogue with their Israeli counterparts, while the second consisted of ten open-ended questions about the topic of the study, and the third elicited general information about the Palestinian NGOs, covering the independent variables addressed in the study. The questionnaire was administered to a stratified sample (124) selected from the Palestinian NGOs in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, comprising 18.3% of the population. The quantitative data collected were analysed statistically using SPSS and the qualitative data were analysed through the content analysis method. The results showed that the Palestinian NGOs expressed a medium degree of readiness for dialogue with the Israeli organizations. This was reflected in several findings, most significant among which was the belief that these organizations should exercise caution when considering such dialogue. The results also indicated that there are statistically significant differences in the degree of readiness for dialogue according to the location of the organization, with those located in the cities showing greater readiness. Moreover, there were statistically significant differences due to the variable of having prior joint projects with Israeli organizations, greater willingness being shown by those that had participated in such projects. Again, there were statistically significant differences due to the variable of the year of establishment of the organization, with those established after the year 2000 showing greater readiness. Finally, there were statistically significant differences according to the educational qualifications of the respondents, in favour of those who hold an MA or higher degree. The findings showed no differences attributable to the remaining variables.

The content analysis of the qualitative data revealed that there was confusion in the responses of a number of individuals in their definition of the concepts of dialogue and normalization, with the perception that dialogue leads to normalization. On the other hand, the majority of the sample agreed that dialogue is communication and exchange between both sides for the purpose of solving a problem, provided that the Israeli organizations reject occupation and its repressive practices against the Palestinian people. Finally, the study sample unanimously agreed that occupation, settlement construction and closures are among the main obstacles rendering dialogue impossible.

PART II

Haifa University: Mapping of the Israeli NGOs on the basis of their readiness to engage in dialogue

1. What is a civil society?

Although the term “civil society” is widely used in political and theoretical contexts, no specific and agreed-upon definition of the term has been found. The confusion in assessing an accepted explanation of the term is due to the existence of different civil societies in the course of history and in different Western societies around the world.

Ben-Eliezer (2001) defines civil society as an attempt to create an autonomic social and cultural domain based on discourse and social organization, stating that human beings are autonomous creatures who interact and form relationships based on freedom and equality. Thus, western civil society emerged out of criticism against the two main organizing principles of the modern State: (a) the socialist welfare State; and (b) the liberal individualism and the neo-liberal market, both of which suffocate a person’s freedom, restrict political participation and prevent the formation of a civil society.

Kimmerling (1995) defines civil society as a domain where all social activities occur without being subordinate to the instructions of the State. Participation in civil society is voluntary and includes different activities which together create a political society that is active and autonomous from the State.

There are several dimensions in the definition of civil society. According to Anheier (2000), the most important dimensions are: (a) the institutional dimension; (b) the organizational dimension; and (c) the individual dimension. Thus, civil society is deemed to be an arena where institutions, organizations and individuals, whose values portray the ideals of the family, State and an autonomous market, rely on an agreed-upon system of civil rules and unite in order to promote common interests.

Comparing the three definitions of civil society stated thus far, it is apparent why an agreed-upon explanation has not been accepted in academic discourse.

Civil society organizations have three main functions: (a) a socialization function - which instils civil skills in civilians and motivates them to learn and use such skills; (b) a public and quasi-public function - which pertains to the supply of public or public-like services by civil society organizations; and (c) a representative function - which refers to the representation of different identities, voices, interests and outlooks on life. Moreover, civil society organizations enrich public debate by addressing and convincing the government to relate to new ideas and to develop a new public agenda (Gidron, Katz and Bar, 2001).

The combination of factors such as the level of organization and goals creates four types of civil society organizations: (a) interest groups, (b) social movements (c) root organizations and (d) volunteer organizations (Yishai, 2003).

Interest groups unite people with the same economic, employment or professional interests or attributions. As such, the goal of the organization is clear and aspires to promote the interests of its members. Furthermore, these types of institutions have a high level of organization needed to keep track of their members and finances.

Social movements, as opposed to interest groups, challenge the public agenda and attempt to create a new social order. These movements usually lack finances or a high level of organization, but, as their agenda is adopted by the wider public, they tend to become institutionalized and organized.

Root organizations address a specific problem usually defined by circumstances such as an addiction, disease, family status and so on. Their agenda is usually guided by everyday problems and once these unique problems are solved their goal is achieved.

Volunteer organizations are defined by their members' selfless activity for the greater good of society. Their level of organization differs and their goal is defined by societal needs. These organizations, as opposed to social movements, do not challenge the public agenda, nor do they address unique requirements as root organizations do (Yishai 2003).

2. Does a civil society exist in Israel?

According to Ben-Eliezer (2001), civil society in Israel will be apparent when new social movements challenging the current public agenda cooperate and constitute an alternative discourse. As such, according to Ben-Eliezer, an adequate civil society in Israel has yet to emerge. Yishai (2003) claims that Israeli civil society is a social domain, separate from the State, where activities and organizations are diverse and do not necessarily criticize or offer an alternative public agenda to that of the State.

Between 1981 and 1998, over 23,000 civil society organizations, constituting over 80% of all non-profit organizations, were registered in Israel. In 1998, 65% of the registered NGOs were regarded as civil society organizations.

Civil society organizations employ over 30,000 paid employees and an unknown number of volunteers. The research shows that the majority of civil society organizations do not employ any staff at all (42.5%) and 27% have fewer than 10 employees.

Most civil society organizations engage in the provision of services (77%). This finding is explained by theories linking NGOs' activity to government failure in the modern heterogeneous society. Since the government provides services inadequate for the average citizen, many groups of citizens do not receive the services they require. The remaining void is filled by civic initiatives that supply a wide array of services that the government cannot afford to provide, and thereby constitute a new social order, i.e. civil society.

In Israel, the diversity of society, which fostered the emergence of a civil society, and the erosion and privatization of the Israeli welfare State in the last two decades, have increased the need for civil society organizations.

Only 6% of Israeli civil society organizations are advocacy organizations; this is a result of the centralization of public consent to governmental and political discourse.

There are three main funding sources for civil society organizations in Israel: public finance, self-financing through income raised by the organization's activity, and donations.

3. Types of civil society organizations in Israel

Among civil society organizations registered in Israel, 10,358 (44%) have a religious or orthodox character. Religious civil society organizations mainly provide services to the community (97%). The community's need for services provided by religious civil society organizations is a result of the lack of satisfaction with the services provided by the State. Moreover, in order to maintain the segregated character of the community and to reduce friction with the social environment, the establishment of a system of services of an ideological or religious nature allows these communities to preserve the status quo (Gidron, Elon and Ben Noon, 2004).

Arab civil society organizations constitute 4.5% of civil society organizations in Israel. However, it should be noted that a difference exists in the nature of the activity and attendance between Jewish and Arab civil society organizations. Arab organizations employ more personnel than Jewish civil society organizations and seem to be an alternative mode of employment for expelled Arab citizens. Moreover, Arab civil society organizations provide more services to their communities than the Jewish organizations do and focus their energy on fields such as advocacy and human rights in order to represent their national awakening.

There is a growing number of non-sectoral and non-partisan NGOs geared to improving the political system, civil service ethics or democratic climate of the country. These organizations also tackle the issues of pluralism, tolerance and Arab-Jewish coexistence. These civil society organizations vary in their position towards State agencies, and do not necessarily display a confrontational stance (Silber and Rosenhek, 2000).

Meanwhile, social movements are flourishing in Israel today. Unlike in the past, such activity does not arise from the State but from society. These defiant movements represent the wishes and demands of Israeli citizens, and are manifested by direct and unmediated participation. There are three types of social movements active in Israel today: (a) peace and security movements; (b) women's movements; and (c) environmental movements.

The most prominent social movements in contemporary Israel are those whose main concern is the conflict between Israel and neighbouring countries as well as the conflict with the Palestinian population in the occupied territories. Different social movements from either side of the political spectrum are thriving.

Women's movements have undergone a revolution separating them from the political establishment. Signs of change were already noticeable in the 1970s, when the feminist movement, whose goals focused on women themselves rather than on 'national' interest, took shape. The feminist movement failed to take root in Israeli society, but organizations that stemmed from it, such as centres for the protection of battered women, are flourishing. Although these movements address issues of social welfare, they actually spearhead the social movements and the fight for equality and human rights (Yishai, 1998).

Environmental movements are active in Israel, although on a much smaller scale than in other western countries. There are about 222 environment organizations that can be identified as civil society organizations. They engage in two main activities: environmental protection and the protection of animals (Gidron, Katz and Bar, 2001). It seems that movements of this kind find it difficult to survive in Israel, but those that are still active in this field have drifted away from the State and its embrace. They are independent and often challenge the political authorities.

A survey of the social movements plainly exemplifies the trend towards the differentiation of society from the State as the emergent locus of public demands. This trend is shifting Israeli society away from the political arena towards the civil arena (Yishai, 1998).

4. Mapping of Israeli mainstream civil society organizations

The civil society organizations identified were classified into eight main categories:

- Union organizations – This category refers to workers' unions and professional associations.
- Human and civil rights – This category includes feminist and women's peace and civil rights movements, human rights aid, civil rights advocacy, unrecognized settlements/building rights and employment rights.
- Social welfare - Organizations categorized as providing services in the area of social welfare, as follows: (1) health organizations; (2) organizations representing disabled persons; (3) organizations offering socio-economic assistance; (4) organizations representing those suffering from specific illnesses; and (5) children's welfare organizations.
- Education - This category refers to organizations promoting a better and more accessible education system and also independent research centres.

- Arab-Jewish-Palestinian co-existence – This category refers to all the NGOs committed to promoting dialogue and co-existence between the Jewish and Palestinian citizens of Israel.
- Environment - Environmental civil society organizations encompass organizations fighting to protect the Israeli environment and NGOs dealing with animal protection.
- Economic and organizational development - The category pertaining to economic and organizational development includes civil society organizations that supply consultation services and encourage economic development and entrepreneurship.
- Religious organizations – These organizations aim to promote Jewish religious diversity in Israel as well as interfaith cooperation.

Although the civil society organizations questioned in the research may differ in their affiliation, common characteristics can be identified in the unofficial goals of these organizations. When they were requested to choose goals that are relevant out of a list of 20 categories, an overlap was found between organizations that differ in their affiliation.

Geographical area of activity

Most of the organizations identified are of a national scale and work throughout Israel. Only 14.9% stated that they work in a specific geographical area. This finding refers to two types of organizations. The first type of organizations stated that they worked in a specific geographical area on account of economic constraints. These organizations are middle-sized organizations that do not have the economic capacity to work on a larger geographical scale. The second type of organizations that stated they worked in a specific geographical area were organizations whose goal and orientation were focused on a specific target, an example being NGOs working in the border areas between Israel and the Palestinian territories.

National affiliation of NGOs

The Israeli civil society organizations that participated in the research were composed of 72.9% Jewish NGOs, 18.8% Arab NGOs and 8.3% organizations that are based on Arab-Jewish cooperation. Differences were noted between the civil society organizations in terms of the goals and activities to which they aspire.

The majority of the Arab civil society organizations (55.6%) deal with human rights issues, mainly empowering the Arab citizens of Israel for enjoyment of their rights. It is interesting to note that the Jewish civil society organizations are concerned mostly with social welfare (42.9%) without differentiating between different sectors of the population, as opposed to the Arab NGOs, which are geared to the Arab population.

NGOs that are a joint Arab-Jewish effort were established as an initiative to promote cooperation, civil rights and co-existence between Israel's Arab and Jewish citizens.

Political affiliation

All of the civil society organizations that took part in this research stated that they have no political affiliation with one of the political parties in Israel. Moreover, even organizations that are involved in political activity and oppose the Israeli occupation are not associated with a specific political party.

Organizational structures

Paid workers – The number of employed workers that were paid a monthly salary in the organizations researched fluctuated between none, in cases where the NGO was solely based on volunteers, to 500 employees. The average number of employed workers in this research was 25, while most of the organizations employed 1-15 paid employees.

Volunteers – 96% of the civil society organizations that took part in this research operate with the use of volunteers. In most organizations the number of volunteers ranges from 1 to 15, while the average (without extreme values) was 82 volunteers. It should be noted that the number of volunteers active in the civil society organizations researched is not permanent and varies throughout the year.

Sources of income

In the assessment questionnaire sent out, NGOs were asked to rank their sources of income according to the following categories: tax or membership fee, donations, private grants, governmental grants, provision of services, investments, and other sources. It appears that the most significant source of income for Israeli civil society organizations in the current research is donations. Donations, on average, constitute 80% of the NGOs' income. The remaining 20% of the organizations' income is comprised of membership fees and provision of services such as educational activities. It is interesting to note that 88% of the civil society organizations that took part in this research stated that they do not receive any type of government funding.

5. Cooperation with Palestinian civil society organizations

Knowledge of a parallel Palestinian NGO

74.5% of Israeli civil society organizations do not know of a parallel Palestinian organization. Moreover, it was interesting to note that Arab NGOs did not have a better knowledge of Palestinian civil society organizations than Jewish NGOs. However, a relationship was found between the type of NGO and its knowledge of Palestinian counterparts. Human rights organizations have better knowledge of what organizations exist in the Palestinian territories than does any other type of Israeli civil society organizations. This finding is related to the fact that most Israeli NGOs dealing with human rights maintain a relationship with their Palestinian counterparts. It is interesting to note that social welfare NGOs and environmental NGOs had no knowledge at all of parallel Palestinian NGOs and believed that no similar organization existed in the Palestinian territories.

Current cooperation with Palestinian civil society organizations

45.8% of Israeli civil society organizations maintain cooperation with Palestinian NGOs. These organizations are human rights organizations or organizations that reported 'human rights' as one of their main goals but not necessarily their main identity.

Israeli Arab civil society organizations were found to have more current relationships with Palestinian organizations than Jewish NGOs.

When the organizations participating in this research were asked how they have maintained ties with their Palestinian counterparts throughout the current Intifada, 92.3% of the organizations stated telephone conversations and 76.9% reported they kept in touch through meetings. Most of the organizations stated that the Intifada made it harder to maintain a relationship but did not prevent it. For example, the Intifada made it impossible to meet in Israel and limited encounters between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations had to be held abroad or in the Palestinian territories. It is important to note that, out of the 22 organizations that are in touch with Palestinian NGOs, 12 refused to name who their Palestinian partners were.

Past ties with Palestinian civil society organizations

Israeli civil society organizations which stated on the assessment questionnaire that they did not have current ties with Palestinian NGOs were asked if they had had a connection in the past and what were the reasons it had ceased. Out of 26 organizations, only five acknowledged having had ties with Palestinian organizations in the past. All of these organizations affirmed that the Intifada was responsible for the dissolution of ties. Furthermore, all of these organizations stated that the Palestinian organizations terminated the relationship and thought the reason for this was that the Palestinian Authority forbade any ties with Israeli organizations.

Willingness to engage in dialogue and establish ties with Palestinian organizations

The research indicates that 55.8% of Israeli civil society organizations were willing to engage in dialogue and establish ties with Palestinian organizations without any reservation or condition. Organizations stating an interest in dialogue and establishing ties under certain terms (32.6%) stated their condition was a common interest and mutual goals. Five organizations did not wish to engage in any cooperation with Palestinian NGOs, stating that such a connection was not relevant to their organization's goals but that their position did not stem from ideological considerations. Five organizations refused to answer this question, claiming that such an opportunity had not been debated, and until a decision was taken by the board of directors they did not have the authority to decide on the matter.

6. Conclusion

Civil society organizations in Israel

The aim of this research was to examine the willingness and openness of Israeli civil society organizations to cooperate with Palestinian civil society organizations. The organizations that participated in this research are heterogeneous and represent the mosaic of civil society organizations that exist in Israel today. The organizations, spread throughout Israel, are both young and veteran (4-53 years of activity) and promote different causes and interests, the most prominent being human rights, social welfare, education and research.

It was found that the organizational size of civil society organizations in Israel is fluid on account of the ever-changing number of volunteers. However, most of the organizations in this research had a considerable number of paid employees. This was found to be a result of the activities of these organizations. Most of the organizations that took part in this research are primary organizations that work throughout Israel and therefore need to employ a higher number of paid employees in comparison to other NGOs.

The civil society organizations that participated in this research can be categorized by their ethnic background as: Arab NGOs, Jewish NGOs and Arab-Jewish NGOs. Similarly to the findings of Gidron, Katz and Bar (2001), Arab civil society organizations worked mainly in the fields of civil and human rights and legal aid. The reason for this has been the increasing national awakening of the Arab population consequent to the Intifada and peace process as well as the fact that the Arab minority has been the disadvantaged group in Israel.

The relationship between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations

Important findings consequential to the relationship between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations were established in this research.

First, it was established that Israeli civil society organizations have poor knowledge of what NGOs exist in the Palestinian territories. The most prominent Palestinian civil society organizations mentioned were 'Alkakh' and the 'Palestinian Center for Human Rights'.

However, it was established that 45.8% of the Israeli civil society organizations that took part in the research maintain a relationship today with their Palestinian counterparts. The organizations that maintain relationships with Palestinian organizations are human rights activists and Arab-oriented NGOs. There are two possible explanations why Israeli human rights organizations are more likely to cooperate with Palestinian NGOs. The first reason is related to the common interest that human rights organizations share. In the Intifada, where human rights are violated on a daily basis in both Israel and the Palestinian territories, human rights organizations share a common goal in creating public awareness of the situation at hand. Civil society organizations dealing with issues such as the environment or education are not perceived as important and therefore take a back seat to human rights organizations. This perception undoubtedly affects cooperation between Israeli and Palestinian organizations. Moreover, Israeli civil society organizations dealing with issues such as the environment or education questioned whether such organizations existed at all in the Palestinian territories. The reason they give as to why such organizations do not exist is based on the notion that dealing with issues such as the environment is a luxury Palestinians cannot afford since they have more fundamental and basic interests such as human rights to address.

One of the interesting phenomena found in the context of cooperation between Israeli and Palestinian organizations was the reluctance of Israeli civil society organizations to name their Palestinian partners. Half of the organizations that stated in this research that they maintained ties with Palestinian NGOs refused explicitly to name them. This finding reminds us once more of the tension that exists between Israel and the Palestinian Authority which affects the ties between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations and causes them to be unstable to the extent that naming your Palestinian partner might jeopardize the relationship that exists.

Another interesting finding is related to the minor influence the Intifada has had on the cooperation between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations. The research did convey the difficulties and constraints the Intifada has put on the relationship between Israeli and Palestinian organizations but in most cases did not have such an effect that the relationship ceased.

When the civil society organizations participating in this research were asked if they would be willing to cooperate and establish ties in the future with Palestinian civil society organizations, 88.4% replied positively. This finding supports the notion that civil society organizations have the potential to start a dialogue between Israelis and Palestinians. The obstacles to overcoming the existing gaps are not a matter of the ongoing political strain that exists between the two nations but rather the lack of knowledge of, or acquaintance with, similar Palestinian civil society organizations and their goals or objectives - obstacles that have to do with the present political situation.

To conclude, a good opportunity for establishing dialogue between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations exists. In order to create a dialogue between Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations, a mapping of existing Palestinian organizations must be prepared. This process will allow similar goals, interests and activities, shared by both Israeli and Palestinian civil society organizations, to be identified and new relationships to be created between organizations that do not necessarily address the issue of human rights. Furthermore, an assessment questionnaire is necessary in order to measure the willingness of Palestinian organizations to engage in dialogue. This will prevent any animosity from arising on the Israeli side when an offer to cooperate is refused.

HILLEL – Organization for Parents of Children with Learning Disabilities

HILLEL – Organization for Parents of Children with Learning Disabilities was established in 1986 by a group of concerned parents to support each other in coping with the serious difficulties faced when their children were diagnosed with learning disabilities. Parents would be given the diagnosis, which many of them had to pay for privately, but little or no information or services were forthcoming from the school system. They would be told by teachers that their children were ‘lazy’ or ‘immature’ and ‘if they really tried harder they could succeed.’ Therefore Hillel’s main goal is to educate parents so that they all become well-informed advocates and better spokespersons for their children’s rights. Parents are considered the key factor in their children’s education and future.

The Israel Women’s Network (IWN)

The Israel Women’s Network (IWN) is Israel’s foremost advocacy group for women’s rights. IWN is a unique, non-partisan organization of women united in their determination to improve the status of women in Israel, despite differing political opinions, religious outlooks and ethnic origins. IWN seeks to change the social context and norms that prevent women from assuming their rightful place as equal partners in a just and democratic society.

Ittijah – Union of the Arab Community-Based Organizations	Ittijah – Union of the Arab Community-Based Organizations is the network for Palestinian non-governmental organizations in Israel. Established in 1995, Ittijah works to increase cooperation and institutional capacity among Palestinian Arab organizations that provide support structures and offer services not otherwise available on account of discriminatory practices and policies of the Israeli State. Ittijah strives to strengthen and empower the Palestinian Arab citizens of Israel by promoting the development of Palestinian society and advocating for political, economic and social change. Ittijah has three principal activity areas: local, regional and international advocacy on behalf of Palestinian citizens of Israel; human, technical financial and educational resources provision for institutional capacity-building; and networks of issue-specific organizations, such as for youth and women. Among Ittijah’s activities are regular ambassadorial study days, hosting of solidarity delegations, fact sheet publications and conferences. Contact Details  Tel: +972 4 850 71 10  Email: ittijah@ittijah.org  www.ittijah.org

MachsomWatch – Women against the Occupation and for Human Rights

MachsomWatch – Women against the Occupation and for Human Rights was founded in January 2001 in response to repeated reports in the press about human rights abuses of Palestinians crossing army and border police checkpoints. The excessive Israeli response to the El Aksa Intifada, the prolonged closure and siege of villages and towns on the West Bank provided the stimulus and the motivation for what at first seemed an impossible mission. The initiative of three women – Ronnee Jaeger, a long time activist with experience of human rights work in Guatemala and Mexico, Adi Kuntsman, a feminist scholar who emigrated from the former Soviet Union in 1990 and veteran activist Yehudit Keshet, an orthodox Jewess – Machsom Watch now boasts 400 women members all over the country.

Jerusalem Center for Social and Economic Rights (JCSER)

The Jerusalem Center for Social and Economic Rights (JCSER) is a Palestinian non-governmental human rights organization based in Jerusalem. It was established in 1997 by lawyers and members of the Palestinian community of Jerusalem. JCSER provides legal assistance and representation to Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem subjected to discriminatory policies by the Israeli authorities. JCSER makes use of the Israeli legal system to assist Palestinian Jerusalemites to survive on a day-to-day basis in the city. It seeks to find ways to take the initiative to proactively fight discrimination and improve conditions of daily life in the short term without conferring political legitimacy on Israel's illegal annexation of East Jerusalem. Presently, JCSER is one of the only institutions specifically devoted to providing representation and other legal services on social and economic rights to the Palestinian community in Jerusalem.

MIFTAH – The Palestinian Initiative for the Promotion of Global Dialogue & Democracy

MIFTAH – The Palestinian Initiative for the Promotion of Global Dialogue & Democracy is a non-governmental, non-partisan, Jerusalem-based institution dedicated to fostering democracy and good governance within Palestinian society through promoting public accountability, transparency, the free flow of information and ideas, and the challenging of stereotyping at home and abroad. Established in December 1998, with Hanan Ashrawi as its Secretary-General, MIFTAH's aim is to serve as a Palestinian platform for global dialogue and cooperation guided by the principles of democracy, human rights, gender equity and participatory governance. To this end, MIFTAH undertakes the proactive generation and presentation of policy proposals and the focused dissemination of reliable information. Since its creation, MIFTAH has established the cogency of its positions in Palestine and in the region, and has formulated long- and short-term policies and strategies to deal with particular pressing issues. Through networking with like-minded organizations locally, regionally and internationally, and with Palestinian expatriate communities, MIFTAH has forged lasting relationships and partnerships in pursuit of a common vision of dialogue and democracy.

Palestinian Center for Alternative Solutions (PCAS)

The Palestinian Center for Alternative Solutions (PCAS) is a non-governmental organization that was founded in 2003 by a group of experienced peace activists. They are supported by a large network of people who believe that there are alternative solutions to the current status quo that will bring a peaceful settlement to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Working with both Palestinians and Israelis, the Center tries to break the existing stereotypes by offering formal and informal peace education kits and professional training for dialogue facilitators, and engaging in lobbying and advocacy campaigns. At the same time, it intends to inform and involve as many participants from both societies as possible in peace-building activities. Activities are carried out with the conviction that better knowledge and skills will lead to better understanding.

The Palestinian Center for Conflict Resolution and Reconciliation (CCRR)

The Palestinian Center for Conflict Resolution and Reconciliation (CCRR) is a Palestinian NGO registered with the PNA in September 2000 and committed to an alternative approach to conflict transformation. It cherishes the values of peace, reconciliation, forgiveness, respect and hope. Its missions are to contribute to a prosperous, non-violent Palestine by empowering marginalized groups to participate in the decision-making process that affects their lives. It seeks to strengthen democracy, human rights and justice as essential to a lasting peace. It strives to turn the culture of violence into a culture of non-violence, believing reconciliation to be a long-term goal. It campaigns for peace and justice both within the Palestinian community and among the people of the region. The Center's objectives are to provide training in conflict resolution for Palestinian groups, to strengthen democracy, human rights and justice, to improve the educational process in Palestine, to facilitate encounters and dialogue between groups in Palestine and in the region, and to help build a just and lasting peace. With respect to its target groups, CCRR focuses predominantly on the educational sector (teachers, students, advisers and parents) and their relations with each other. Further target groups for CCRR workshops are government officials. Location: Palestine (cities, villages and camps throughout the West Bank) and the wider region, including Israel.

Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR)

The Palestinian Center for Human Rights (PCHR) is an independent Palestinian human rights organization based in Gaza City. It enjoys consultative status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (ECOSOC). The Center was established in 1995 by a group of Palestinian lawyers and human rights activists in order to protect human rights and promote the rule of law in accordance with international standards. Its aims are to create and develop democratic institutions and an active civil society, while promoting democratic culture within Palestinian society, and to support all the efforts aimed at enabling the Palestinian people to exercise its inalienable rights in regard to self-determination and independence in accordance with international law and United Nations resolutions. The work of the Center is conducted through documentation and investigation of human rights violations, provision of legal aid and counselling for both individuals and groups, and preparation of research articles relevant to such issues as the human rights situation and the rule of law. The Center also provides comments on Palestinian draft laws and urges the adoption of legislation that incorporates international human rights standards and basic democratic principles. To achieve its goals, the Center has recruited a committed staff of well-known human rights lawyers and activists.

PASSIA – Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs

PASSIA – Palestinian Academic Society for the Study of International Affairs is an Arab non-profit institution, located in Jerusalem/Al-Quds, with a financially and legally independent status. It is not affiliated with any government, political party or organization. PASSIA seeks to present the Palestinian question in its national, Arab and international contexts through academic research, dialogue and publication. PASSIA endeavours to ensure that research undertaken under its auspices is specialized, scientific and objective and that its symposia and workshops, whether international or intra-Palestinian, are open, self-critical and conducted in a spirit of harmony and cooperation. PASSIA's projects include a series of seminars on Diplomacy and Protocol, Strategic Studies, the European Community, and Education on Democracy. This seminar programme provides a much-needed focus inside Palestine for training Palestinian graduates in international affairs, with lectures and discussions led by Palestinian and foreign specialists of the highest calibre. PASSIA's involvement in the question of Jerusalem remains extensive. It hosts regular workshops which address different but inter-connected problems concerning the holy city such as access to information, holy sites, Israeli settlement, and viable future municipal arrangements as the capital for the two States. PASSIA cooperates and coordinates activities with other Palestinian institutions both inside and outside Palestine in its persistent efforts to ensure a wider understanding of Palestinian issues. PASSIA, by providing a forum for the free expression and analysis of a plurality of Palestinian perspectives and methodology, strives to develop and clarify its own and others' understanding of international relations as they affect the Palestinian struggle for justice and peace.

The Peace and Democracy Forum (PDF-Palestine)

The Peace and Democracy Forum (PDF-Palestine) is a Palestinian non-governmental organization based in East Jerusalem, and functions as a public institution subject to the rules and regulations governing civil society institutions. On 1 April 2004, PDF-Palestine initiated its activities, based on the declared aims of the Forum and on the policies and subsequent plan of action adopted by the Board of Trustees. PDF-Palestine aims at: raising awareness of the Palestinian public regarding their economic and social environment, and enhancing individual and group involvement in order to develop elements of sustainability within society; encouraging concerned Palestinians within the various sectors of society to make use of the available legal, economic and social means in order to run their affairs; enhancing democratic behaviour, practices and measures within Palestinian institutions and within society; promoting openness, transparency and accountability within public sector institutions and within civil society institutions; highlighting methods of non-violence to resolve social, economic and political conflicts; and mobilizing public support for negotiations in order to achieve a peaceful settlement to the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

People's Campaign for Peace and Democracy (HASHD)

The People's Campaign for Peace and Democracy (HASHD) is a Palestinian organization promoting grassroots support for the People's Voice initiative of Ami Ayalon and Sari Nusseibeh since 2002. The initiative calls for a two-State final settlement based on, inter alia, the 1967 borders with agreed one-to-one territorial exchange, no return of Palestinian refugees to Israel, no Jewish settlement in the Palestinian State, and free access to the holy sites in Jerusalem, which would have a special status. In the first half of its existence, HASHD gained 160,000 Palestinian and 254,000 Israeli expressions of support. The organization also aims to develop democratic awareness and participation in Palestinian civil society. It is a membership organization composed of local committees.

The Regional Council of the Bedouin Palestinian Unrecognized Villages in the Negev	The Regional Council of the Bedouin Palestinian Unrecognized Villages in the Negev was established in 1997 as a community-based non-governmental organization for the equality of the Palestinian Bedouins in the Negev. The Regional Council consists of 22 local heads of local village committees who advocate for social change and economic justice for their communities. The regional Council works to achieve its goals through the implementation of the following programmes: political mobilization to represent unrecognized village needs on the Israeli political agenda, promotion of democracy through local elections and community development work, and training and skills development. Contact Details  Tel: +972 8 628 30 43  www.rcuv.org
Sabeel – Ecumenical Liberation Theology Center	Sabeel – Ecumenical Liberation Theology Center is an ecumenical grassroots liberation movement among Palestinian Christians. It is an ecumenical centre for Palestinian liberation theology which seeks to make the Gospel contextually relevant. In Arabic Sabeel means ‘The Way’ and also ‘Spring of Water’. Sabeel strives to develop a spirituality based on justice, peace, non-violence, liberation and reconciliation for the different national and faith communities. Sabeel also works to promote a more accurate international awareness regarding the identity, presence and testimony of Palestinian Christians. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 532 71 36  Email: sabeel@sabeel.org  www.sabeel.org

Ta'awon	Ta'awon is a Palestinian youth non-governmental organization founded in 2002 in the belief that volunteerism, peace and democracy can be part of a new Palestine. Working mostly with young people between 15 and 24 years of age, it seeks to build a civic and democratic society, to expand the knowledge of conflict resolution, and to further the possibilities of a culture of peace and democracy among Palestinian youth. Towards this end, Ta'awon organizes training and assemblies for young people, while endeavouring to influence both Palestinian youth and policy-makers on issues of concern to youth such as gender inequality, elections and unemployment. Ta'awon also carries out research and coordinates community projects such as distributing school bags, winter necessities or Ramadan breakfasts to Palestinian schoolchildren or students who suffer under the difficult circumstances of the occupation. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 296 79 30  Email: taawon@taawon4youth.org  www.taawon4youth.org
WI'AM – The Palestinian Center for Conflict Resolution	WI'AM – The Palestinian Center for Conflict Resolution is a grassroots organization striving alongside other democratic forces present in the larger Bethlehem community to build a democratic and just society. The Center aims to improve the quality of relationships by: addressing injustices rather than avenging them; upholding the dignity of persons on both sides of the conflict; promoting human rights; and advocating for peace among all people. Wi'am works in many different areas that relate to conflict resolution. By working on the grassroots level, Wi'am works directly with the people to address their needs. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 277 05 13  Email: zoughbi@alaslak.org  www.planet.edu/~alaslak/index.html

Women's Affairs Center (WAC)

The Women's Affairs Center (WAC) is a Palestinian women's research and training centre that promotes women's rights and gender equality within Palestinian society. The Center has been in operation in Gaza City since August 1991 and its programmes and activities have evolved with the changing needs and opportunities of women in the Gaza Strip.

3. Joint Israeli-Palestinian organizations

Name	Short Description
The Alternative Information Center (AIC)	The Alternative Information Center (AIC) is an internationally oriented, progressive, joint Palestinian-Israeli activist organization. It is engaged in dissemination of information, political advocacy, grassroots activism and critical analysis of the Palestinian and Israeli societies as well as the Palestinian-Israeli conflict. The AIC strives to promote full individual and collective social, economic, political and gender equality, freedom and democracy and a rejection of the philosophy (ideology and praxis) (weltanschauung) of separation. The most urgent regional task is to find a just solution to the century-old colonial conflict in Palestine and confront the ongoing Israeli occupation regime within its international framework. The AIC method of action develops from the awareness that the local struggle must be practically and analytically situated within the framework of the global justice struggle. The internal AIC structure and working relationship aims to reflect the above-mentioned values. Contact Details            Tel: +972 2 624 11 59            Email: bryan@alt-info.org  www.alternativenews.org
Coalition of Women for Peace	The Coalition of Women for Peace has become one of the leading voices in Israel advocating for a just and viable peace between Israel and Palestine ever since its founding in November 2000, just six weeks after the Intifada began. The Coalition brings together independent women and nine women's peace organizations, some newly formed and others promoting coexistence since the founding of the State of Israel. The Coalition is a mix of Jewish and Palestinian women (all citizens of Israel), and takes action to amplify the voices of women calling for peace and justice for all inhabitants of the region. Contact Details            Email: gsvirsky@netvision.net.il  http://coalitionofwomen.org/home

Crossing Borders (CB)	Crossing Borders (CB) is a project for Israeli (both Jewish and Arab), Palestinian and Jordanian youth, founded in October 1999 on the idea that it is important to involve youth in the process of working for a better tomorrow in the Middle East. It provides young people with a dynamic forum for self-expression, creating in that way a network to make contact, share experiences, exchange ideas, and learn from each other. Further main activities of Crossing Borders are the publication of a bimonthly magazine, a two-week summer course in Denmark, and intensive training in basic journalism, conflict management, communications skills and the role of the media. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 647 60 54  Email: anham@crossingborder.org  www.crossingborder.org/
Friends of the Earth Middle East (FoEME)	Friends of the Earth Middle East (FoEME) is a unique organization that brings together Jordanian, Palestinian and Israeli environmentalists. Its primary objective is the promotion of cooperative efforts to protect the shared environmental heritage. In so doing, it seeks to advance both sustainable regional development and the creation of necessary conditions for lasting peace in the region. FoEME has offices in Amman, Bethlehem and Tel-Aviv. FoEME is a member of Friends of the Earth International, the largest grassroots environmental organization in the world. Contact Details  Tel: Tel Aviv: +972 3 560 53 83  Bethlehem: +972 2 274 79 48  Email: info@foeme.org  www.foeme.org

Friendship Village	The Friendship Village is a centre for educating young Israelis and Palestinians to live in a multicultural environment. Through well-structured workshops, seminars and more informal and spontaneous education methods, participants are taught to respect and learn about the 'other' and to recognize and build on what is common between people of different backgrounds. Through cooperation projects and campaigns, the wider message for peace is supported. The Friendship Village grew out of Re'ut Sadaka, a youth movement, and was officially established in 1996. Although much work still needs to be done on the 'village' itself - which will host a seminar centre, the School for Coexistence, a study centre and living quarters - the educational programme was launched in 1998. Contact Details  Tel: +972 9 898 26 94  http://friendshipvillage.homestead.com/home.html
Israel/Palestine Center for Research and Information (IPCRI)	The Israel/Palestine Center for Research and Information (IPCRI), founded in Jerusalem in 1988, is the only joint Palestinian-Israeli public policy think-tank in the world. It is devoted to developing practical solutions for the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, IPCRI deals with the cardinal issues in the Israeli-Arab conflict, issues where the two sides find themselves at loggerheads, and where cooperation is necessary. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 676 94 60  Email: ipcricri@ipcricri.org  www.ipcricri.org
Israeli-Palestinian Peace Coalition (IPPC)	The Israeli-Palestinian Peace Coalition (IPPC) was formed in 2002 by a group of leading politicians, academics, non-governmental organization activists and cultural figures. The common denominator for the founding members was concern over the absence of a formal peace process, the assertion of the existence of partners for peace on both sides, and mutual belief in an alternative to terror and militarism. IPPC's platform calls for a two-State solution, a divided Jerusalem, and a resolution for the refugee issue. Its joint Israeli-Palestinian activities include: demonstrations against violence and occupation, political statements, media campaigns, open forums and conferences, youth development workshops overseas, and local and international advocacy. Contact Details  Tel: +972 3 566 32 91

MidEast Web for Coexistence	The MidEast Web for Coexistence was started by people active in Middle East dialogue and peace education efforts. Its goal is to weave a world-wide web of Arabs, Jews and others who want to build a new Middle East based on coexistence and neighbourly relations. Its members and staff include distinguished educators, engineers, Web designers and other professionals experienced in dialogue, peace education projects and in promoting dialogue and coexistence using the Internet. Contact Details  Tel: +972 8 947 36 03  Email: mew@mideastweb.org  www.mideastweb.org
Neve Shalom – Wahat al-Salam (NSWAS)	Neve Shalom – Wahat al-Salam (NSWAS) is a cooperative village of Jews and Palestinian Arabs of Israeli citizenship. The village is situated equidistant from Jerusalem and Tel Aviv-Jaffa. The reality of NSWAS as a bi-national community serves as the base for its educational work. Articles and reports on the village government, infrastructure and future development plans, information about community members, a chronicle of events, and information regarding the volunteer programme are available for consultation on its website. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 991 56 21  Email: hotel@nswas.org  www.nswas.org
OneVoice	OneVoice aims to amplify the voice of the overwhelming but heretofore silent majority of moderates who wish for peace and prosperity, empowering them to demand accountability from elected representatives and ensure that the agenda is not hijacked by forces of militant absolutism. Contact Details  Tel: Tel Aviv: +972 3 516 80 05  Ramallah: +972 2 296 38 43  www.onevoicemovement.org/wps/portal/

Parents Circle – Families Forum	Parents Circle – Families Forum appears to be a world precedent that bereaved families, victims from both sides, embark on a joint reconciliation mission while a conflict is still active. Consisting of several hundreds of bereaved families, half Palestinian and half Israeli, the Families Forum has played a crucial role, since its inception in 1995, in spearheading a reconciliation process between Israelis and Palestinians. The Forum members have all lost immediate family members as a result of the violence in the region. The Forum strives to offer a breakthrough in people’s frame of mind, to allow a change of perception, a chance to reconsider one’s views and attitudes towards the conflict and the other side. The Forum activities are a unique phenomenon in that they continue during all political circumstances and in spite of all tensions and violence in the region. Its members initiate and lead projects throughout the Israeli and Palestinian communities. Contact Details  Tel: Tel Aviv: +972 3 535 50 89  Jerusalem: +972 2 627 50 22  Emails:  contact@theparentscircle.org; alquds@theparentscircle.org  www.theparentscircle.org
PRIME – Peace Research Institute in the Middle East	PRIME – Peace Research Institute in the Middle East is a non-governmental, non-profit organization established by Palestinian and Israeli researchers with the help of the Peace Research Institute in Frankfurt, Germany, and located at the Talihta Kumi School in Beit Jala. PRIME’s purpose is to pursue mutual coexistence and peace-building through joint research and outreach activities. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 276 55 73  Email: prime@planet.edu  www.vispo.com/PRIME/about.htm

Sadaka-Re'ut – Arab-Jewish Youth Partnership	Sadaka-Re'ut – Arab-Jewish Youth Partnership was established in 1983. The movement was founded on the idea that building mutual trust requires the fostering of real relationships. Seminars, workshops, field trips, training programmes, volunteer cooperation projects, lectures, and coexistence and multicultural activities are organized, creating a process of dialogue, promoting respect and tolerance, and preparing the young leaders of Israel to look at each other differently. Increasingly, Sadaka-Re'ut is asked to organize workshops for other groups, and from this arose the idea of the Friendship Village, a centre that offers an ongoing educational programme. Contact Details  Tel: +972 3 518 23 36  Email: sadaka@netvision.net.il; rd_reut@netvision.net.il  www.reutsadaka.org
Seeds of Peace – Empowering Leaders of the Next Generation	Seeds of Peace – Empowering Leaders of the Next Generation has worked to support Israeli and Palestinian teenagers in becoming leaders for peaceful coexistence within and between their communities since 1999. The Center is the clearing-house for the follow-up activities of the Seeds of Peace organization in the Middle East. The Center provides administrative and follow-up support to Jewish and Arab participants in Seeds of Peace summer camp programmes, and conducts four-day intensive seminars with Israeli, Palestinian and Jordanian youth. The activities are designed to allow the young people to teach each other about their culture, family and identity. In 2003, Seeds of Peace launched its Advanced Coexistence Programme in which Israelis and Palestinians come together for weekly meetings in four different locations from dozens of cities all over Israel, both sides of Jerusalem and the West Bank. Contact Details  Tel: +972 2 582 02 22  Email: info@seedsofpeace.org Tel Aviv Office  Tel: +972 3 527 37 40  Email: center@seedsofpeace.org Ramallah Office  Tel: +972 2 297 24 23  Email: ramallah@seedsofpeace.org  www.seedsofpeace.org
